ARCHÄOLOGIE UND ALTES TESTAMENT: FESTSCHRIFT FÜR KURT GALLING. Edited by Arnulf Kuschke and Ernst Kutsch. Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck), 1970. 363 pages. Cloth. DM 90.00.

Galling, for whose 70th birthday this volume was prepared, has been a leading student of the archaeology and history of the Old Testament. A listing of his books and articles covers more than seven pages. It includes a monograph on Israel's election traditions, a textbook for the history of Israel, a commentary on Ecclesiastes, several contributions to commentaries written by others, and the very important Studien zur Geschichte Israels im persischen Zeitalter. He has contributed dozens of dictionary and encyclopedia articles and served as one of the editors of the third edition of Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart.

The 31 essays in German, French, and English have no unifying theme and reflect the wide range of topics pertaining to Galling's competence. In addition to a number of exegetical studies, an international team of colleagues and students contributed articles on geography, archaeology, ancient literature, musical instruments, and architecture. Among the more interesting items is Kutsch's proposal to derive the word berith (covenant) from a root meaning to see or to choose for a specific assignment. A primary nuance of the noun is then found to be "stipulation" or "obligation."

Walter Zimmerli continues his studies on exilic theology by showing that the promise of release in the jubilee year was reinterpreted to mean that God would free Israel from captivity in the 50th year. Zimmerli notes that Ezekiel's plans to rebuild the temple and Jerusalem (Ezekiel 40—48) were received by the prophet in the 25th year of his captivity (halfway to deliverance) and that the measurements in this symbolic rebuilding are all multiples of 25.

The late Paul W. Lapp submitted a study of the Persian period of Palestinian pottery with important data coming from the Concordia excavation at Taanach.

MATTHIAS CLAUDIUS: SEIN WEG UND SEINE WELT. By Urban Roedl. Hamburg: Friedrich Wittig Verlag, 1969. 352 pages. Cloth. Price not given.

Claudius (1740—1815) was a German Lutheran poet and author. For a while he was editor of the Wandsbecker Bote, but he spent most of his adult life as a free-lance writer, and he published eight volumes of his works. He wrote poetry as well as prose; he wrote both in a light and in a serious vein. He collected sayings and letters, wrote book reviews and meditations meant for edification. His writings consist of short pieces.

In the age of Rationalism he remained a believing Lutheran, treasuring the heritage of the Reformation. His wide interests in theological questions may be gauged from his translation of Fénelon.

A biography which reaches a third edition almost commends itself. The author has a delightful style. He tells the life story of Claudius with due sympathy and with an appreciation of the literary, spiritual, and economic struggles which his subject endured. Claudius deserved a biographer who could tell about him in this fashion.

Claudius was a contemporary of Goethe, Herder, Hamann, Klopstock, Lessing, and Kant. He seems to have known all of these men personally. Roedl's biography, therefore, gives us valuable insights into the literary as well as the theological aspects of the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

A pulpit DOESN'T MEAN MUCH

until you get into it

And in the 1971 Concordia Pulpit you'll be getting into a whole yearful of sermons. Over 60 sermons that we think you'll find useful as idea-starters, as sources of illustrations, as sparks to set off your own thinking.

In the Concordia Pulpit you'll discover fresh approaches to familiar texts. You'll see how men like Omar Stuenkel, Richard Hoyer, and Herbert Lindemann interpret these texts for their people—how they communicate to people living, struggling, and rejoicing in the '70s.

There's a sermon for every Sunday and major festival in the church year, with a special series this year of seven Tre Ore sermonettes. All are based on texts taken from one of the four Gospels.

It's true. You're really getting into something with the Concordia Pulpit.

CONCORDIA'S LENTEN VOLUME FOR 1971

*a sick
world
and the healing
christ*

by Herbert F.
Lindemann

As everyone knows, it's a sick, sick world. Frustration, escapism, extremism—all symptoms of a basic disease. Man's alienation from God, from Life.

In this collection of nine sermons for Lent and Easter, Herbert Lindemann diagnoses the world's "sickness unto death," then prescribes the healing Christ. The Christ who came to a sick world, and died for a sick world, and rose to heal that world.

With awareness and insight the author tackles the moral and social problems of today by getting to their source—hatred and entrapment, fear-filled selfishness. He does not assume a legalistic stance, and neither does he dilute the Gospel to accommodate it to the prejudices of our scientific, materialistic age.

Lindemann has a solid grip on reality and a sincere concern for the people who live this reality. To them he proclaims the healing Christ, the risen Christ to redeem the brokenness of now—to reconcile people to themselves, people to people, people to Christ.

Nine Powerful Sermons Grapple with These Topics of Today:

FOR LENT
Unrestraint	Sensuality
Escapism	Addiction
Extremism	Revolution

FOR GOOD FRIDAY Frustration

FOR MAUNDY THURSDAY
Spiritualism

FOR EASTER
Reductionism

Paper, $1.95      Order No. 12U2342

Herbert F. Lindemann, pastor of Redeemer Lutheran Church in Fort Wayne, Ind., is the author of The Daily Office. He has also written Dead or Alive, a popular Lenten sermon volume, and Sunday Psalter, both currently unavailable.
